What the owner told us...

“It has been a real honour to own what we feel is a little piece of history. The cottage is so cosy and full of character, and the chapel is just something completely unique. Restoring it and bringing it back to life has been incredibly special. We’ve loved the community here too; it’s welcoming, friendly, and full of little moments that make living here feel easy.”

Our Thoughts...

This is one of those homes that reveals more of itself the longer you spend here. At first, it’s the character that draws you in. The stone, the history and the feeling that this is somewhere with a real story behind it. But very quickly you start to notice the detail, the care that has gone into every space, and how naturally everything seems to work together.

The cottage itself feels warm, settled and incredibly easy to live in. Full of charm without ever feeling restrictive, it has that cosy atmosphere buyers hope to find in a home like this. Then you step into the chapel, and that’s where the property really starts to stand apart. Originally dating back to the 1880s, it has been thoughtfully restored into a space that still respects its history while offering genuine flexibility for modern life.

The open living space within the chapel feels bright, calm and adaptable, whether that’s for guests, older children wanting independence, working from home, creative space or even potential income opportunities subject to permissions. Upstairs, the vaulted bedroom continues that same feeling, open and full of character with exposed beams adding warmth and personality throughout.

The additional garden adds another dimension entirely. Set separately from both the cottage and chapel, it feels private, peaceful and designed to be properly enjoyed, with different spaces to sit, relax and slow down. Combined with the summerhouse, the flexibility of the chapel and the strong sense of community within Greetham itself, this is a home that offers something genuinely different, not for the sake of being unusual, but because it gives you more ways to live.
